

Contents

Acknowledgements

1 Introduction	1
Objectives of the study	1
Background to the problem	2
Overview of this report	10
2 Racial violence and harassment in Britain:
Assessing the evidence	12
Introduction	12
The police and racial violence and harassment	12
The scale of the problem: racial incidents reported to the police	15
The British Crime Survey (BCS): a more accurate estimate of the problem?	17
Problems associated with victimisation surveys	19
‘Special’ surveys on racial violence and harassment	20
Summary	24
3 The nature of racial violence and harassment:
Some findings from a qualitative study	26
Introduction	26
The overall prevalence of racial violence and harassment	28
Racial abuse and threatening behaviour	28
Racial attacks	34
Racially motivated damage to property	37
The non-reporting of incidents of racial violence and harassment to the police	38
Summary	39

4 The effect of racial harassment on people's lifestyle	42
Introduction	42
Adapting the way you lead your life because of the fear of being racially harassed	43
Summary	47
5 Summary and conclusions	48
Summary of findings	48
Policy implications	52
References	59

Acknowledgements

This report is the outcome of research funded by the Joseph Rowntree Charitable Trust. The study would not have been possible without the participation of the interviewees. I would like to thank them and the Race Relations Committee of the London Borough of Waltham Forest, the Afro-Caribbean Elders Association of Waltham Forest, Jobs Through English Training (JET), Purehart Services, Plus 4, and Anita Bedi for their support and help in finding the interviewees. Thanks are also due to Sharon Beishon, Raj Raithatha and Shamsa Rana for their assistance in carrying out the interviews.

I would also like to thank my colleagues at PSI for their help and support during the course of this study. In particular, I am grateful to Richard Berthoud, Pamela Meadows, Tariq Modood, Tim Newburn and David Smith (now of the University of Edinburgh) for their detailed comments on earlier drafts of the report. I would also like to thank all those outside PSI who by commenting on an earlier draft helped me to improve the book, particularly Dennis Brooks, Marion Fitzgerald and Paul Gordon.